'Ahalya'

Ahalya was Brahma, the Creator's prized creation. She was the most beautiful female he ever created, into whose creation he poured all his creativity, and he gave her the name Ahalya, meaning "the one with no ugliness" in Sanskrit. Knowing that Indra would invariably covet her, Brahma sent Ahalya to live in the hermitage of Sage Gautama until she reached puberty. When she grows up, Gautama returns her to Brahma. Pleased with the sage's asceticism, Brahma bestows Ahalya to him as his wife. Indra is enamoured by Ahalya and is thus jilted when she is married to Gautama. He plans his union with her. One day when Gautama is away, he enters the hermitage disguised as Gautama and requests intercourse with her. The sage returns in the meantime, catching the disguised Indra and Ahalya making love. Outraged, he curses Indra to be covered in a thousand female genitals and Ahalya to be turned to stone. Ahalya begs for his forgiveness. Moved he grants her a boon that she would be released from her stoned form when the sacred feet of the son of Ayodhya (Lord Rama) touch her. He reduces Indra's curse as well, reducing the genitals to a thousand eyes. Centuries later, Lord Rama on his way to Mithila, for Sita's swayamvar passes through the hermitage, the dust from his feet touches the stone that is Ahalya. The curse is broken and Ahalya returns to her human form. Lord Rama touches her feet, proclaiming
